The Ferrari has a manual transmission with an automatically operated clutch. "Nearly every American car", as you put it, has an automatic transmission with a torque convertor (no clutch fitted). Using 3,2,1 simulates a manual transmission, but it's not the samething. The two transmissions operate on enitirely different principals.

So i have a 2011 458 build date march of 2011. Its got 600 miles on it. The red gearbox light has gone on two times while driving in auto sport mode under light driving conditions and it has kicked me into neutral. I ve re started and light goes off. Car i believe drives normal other than this. Never happened in manual mode.
